The weekly cost is £1 and is payable in advance. If you pay £4.34, or multiples thereof, by calendar month (Direct Debit and Standing Order members) then each 34p per entry will accumulate in your account over three months to fund the thirteenth week in every quarter of a year resulting from some months having 5 weeks in them.

Direct debits may be set up online, over the phone or by written mandate. Your regular payments will continue until you cancel.

The promoter will take all reasonable steps to ensure payment received into its bank account is considered as a stake in the draw. In the event of ambiguous credits into the bank account the promoter will take reasonable steps to confirm the intention of these monies from the sender of these monies and act accordingly.

Card payments will be accepted either face to face, in the lottery office, by mail order or via telephone. The player must be the cardholder. The promoter will not take any card payments without permission from the cardholder. The promoter will hold a record of any and all transactions.

In the event of a member disputing the validity of a card payment transaction made against them, the promoter will progress an investigation into the complaint and if appropriate make a refund. If a transaction is shown to be incorrect the promoter will make a refund to the member on their card for the full amount of this transaction irrespective of the number of draws that player had enjoyed during the participation of in that prevailing period.

If the transaction is made by mail order then the following will apply. In the event of the player being new to the lottery the promoter will confirm their opening subscription in writing. In the event of the transaction failing the promoter will inform the prospective player of this failure and would expect to include reasons for this failure. The prospective player will be asked whether they still wish to become a player of the lottery and if so would need to supply an opening payment.

In the event of the player renewing their existing subscription it will be assumed that the transaction has succeeded and the promoter will not notify confirmation to the player. In the event of the transaction failing the promoter will inform the player of this failure and would expect to include reasons for this failure. The player will be asked whether they wish to play the lottery and that if so would need to supply another payment.

If the transaction is conducted via telephone the following will apply. The player will be informed during the call if the transaction has succeeded or failed. If this player is a new player to the lottery they will be sent confirmation of their participation in the lottery. If this player is an existing member renewing their subscription they will not be sent any confirmation of the transaction.

Subscriptions to the Lottery do not attract Gift Aid.

Players pay in advance for a number of chances in a series of draws. Once a payment for a number of weeks has been made it will be the promoter's decision as to whether a refund can be made on this subscription. Players may stop participation in the draw at any time and no notice is required to the promoter. In the event of a player wishing to stop playing and having a sum of money held by the promoter as a stake for future draws, the promoter may at their discretion refuse a refund of this advance payment. The refund could, in any event only be made for the value of the initial payment less any chances used in the interim period and less administration costs incurred.

Refunds can only be made in exceptional circumstances. The promoter will contact existing and past players in order to ascertain whether they wish to continue participation in the draw.
